Abstract. This parliamentary study analyses the current state of legal regulation governing the recording and use of individuals' biometric data in Ukraine in the context of European integration and Ukraine's commitments arising from the process of accession to the European Union. It examines the European Union's approaches to the processing of biometric data as a special category of personal data, as well as the recommendations of the European Commission issued in the framework of the 2025 accession negotiations. 411. Parliamentary Study on European Union and Council of Europe Standards for the Protection and Processing of Personal Data in Law Enforcement Activities

https://research.rada.gov.ua/uploads/documents/34321.pdf

Abstract. The parliamentary study provides an analysis of the standards of the Council of Europe and the European Union in the field of personal data protection within the activities of the police and criminal justice authorities. The material systematizes international legal instruments and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR), which form a unified European legal framework for the protection of informational privacy.

The study explains the essence of interference with the right to privacy through the "three-part test" and establishes the obligation of personal data controllers to differentiate data by categories of persons (suspects, convicted persons, victims, witnesses) and by the nature of the information ("hard" facts versus "soft" assessments). It details the special (sensitive) status of data on criminal convictions, emphasizes the rehabilitative purpose of data processing and the inadmissibility of lifelong stigmatization of convicted persons, and substantiates the requirement for differentiated storage periods for biometric data depending on the severity of the offence. Based on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR), the study demonstrates the legal inadmissibility of automatic restrictions on the rights of individuals (in particular, prisoners) based solely on their formal status, without an individualized assessment of their current level of risk.

The study outlines the criteria for the independence of supervisory authorities, their investigative and corrective powers, as well as the right of individuals to effective judicial protection and compensation for material and non-material damage. Recommendations are provided for improving national legislation, in particular regarding a clear distinction between the general and law enforcement regimes governing the protection and processing of personal data and the implementation of the principle of accountability of public authorities.

Abstract. International labor migration is an integral part of modern economic life. Labor migrants are important both for the economy of developed countries, in terms of staffing various sectors of production, and for the countries who are "providers" of labor resources. A significant part of the funds earned by migrants is sent to the homeland, thus reducing the poverty level of its population. States' perception of migratory interdependence stimulates the active search for legal mechanisms that allow migration flows to become more orderly and thereby ensure the effective use of migrants' labor potential and guarantees of their rights. One of the mechanisms of such regulation is employment permits.

The historical and legal aspects of the mentioned issues have been studied. European Court of Human Rights practice has been analyzed; such practice indicates a constant increase in the number of categories of applications related to Ukraine's violations of the rights of individuals due to unjustified refusal to grant status or unjustified deprivation of status, as well due to failure to provide benefits or assistance based on lack of funding. Opinions on the issues raised in the applications were summarized and briefly stated in the Conclusion.
